The journey partnership

Purpose

A well-designed journey extends classroom learning, develops independence and strengthens relationships. The school, family, student and journey provider each have a part in making it safe and successful.

Before departure

Read all communications, meet deadlines and disclose information that may affect the student’s safety, participation or wellbeing. Ask questions early and avoid sending unapproved medicines, food or equipment.

During the journey

The agreed school communication channel should be used for routine updates. Students may have defined device times so they remain engaged and rested. In an urgent situation, the school follows its emergency communication protocol.

After return

Rest, hydration and a calm transition help. Encourage the student to share what they learned, not only what they visited.
